TO THE PRISONERS

A good book is a companion and a friend, and, like a friend, demands careful treatment.

Writing in a book, carelessness in its use, or wilful injuries cannot be indulged; because its pleasures for another man are thus greatly lessened.

An accurate register of the books delivered to the cells is kept, and an examination of them made on their return.

If desired, the same book can be retained one month.

Keep the library slate clean.

Select not less than twenty numbers from the catalogue, and keep them fresh and legible on the slate. Select your numbers from the different departments of the catalogue.

On book-day place the slate and book outside of the cell door otherwise it will be presumed that no exchange of book is desired.

Each prisoner is responsible for the care and return of the book he receives. It must not be loaned to anyone, nor forced between the bars of the cell door.

Return the catalogue to the library at time of discharge.

Take the catalogue with you when you change location.

By giving attention to these plain regulations the use of the library can be best enjoyed by all.
